Singing Cadets
Fall 2017 - Spring 2018

- After an audition process and a brief interview with the officers of the Singing Cadets, the new members are informed of their acceptance into the group. New members attend “Buffo 101” which is an orientation class presented by the Vice President of the Singing Cadets. At this time the new members learn they are on probationary status for two semesters. They also learn of additional requirements that are expected of new members (now called “buffos”). The additional requirements entail completing “key” which is a project where the buffos must turn a plank of wood into a key shape using only the concrete of a driveway and the curb to sand and shape the key. They then need to complete 40 assignments in order to continue being a Singing Cadet. New members also learn that they are not allowed to say five words during rehearsals and on tour if they say one of the five words the entire group has to say a recitation simultaneously at the end of rehearsal until they do it correctly as approved by the older members of the group.

- Buffos receive “gigs” for violations of the Singing Cadets Handbook and also for not following through on “details” given to them by the older members. The “details” are requests that the older men give to the buffo to complete. New members also learn that they are responsible for entertaining the older members on the bus by “roasting them” and making jokes. The new members must also know the location of the bus at all times. New members also take part in “call downs” where they have to call two of the older members of the group and inform them of the details of the performance the next day or they can receive a “gig.” At the end of the winter tour, the new members take part in performing a class set of 25 “atomics” (a type of push-up) while on the bus.

- In new member “presentation” practice was held at approximately midnight at a member’s house without notifying or communicating the activities planned with an advisor. At the activity, new member educators and active members directed new members to participate in a line-up type of activity that involved physical exercise (squats, push-ups, sit-ups) if new members did not recite the Kappa Delta Chi pledge correctly.

- During rush week, pledges reported that there were numerous parties at the house of one of the Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity (FIJI) members. At 1:00 am, pledges of FIJI were given instructions by their pledge trainers to go to a ranch and paint the right. The pledges were told that it would be safe for them to stay up all night getting to know each other. They were told they could bring alcohol, but no drugs. It was reported that marijuana and beer were present. The majority of the pledges stood up throughout the night and designated drivers took them back home at 6 am.

- Should the organization choose to reapply for University recognition at the conclusion of the suspension period, Kappa Delta Chi Sorority, Inc., must provide documentation that the organization has a comprehensive hazing education program required of all members each semester in local by-laws, standard operating procedures or rules.

<td>New members of the Aggie Wranglers team attended a fake workshop over the summer where the new members were required to complete dancing for 3 hours; one member threw up, one member short passed out, legs were dropped, and one member bit their head on the concrete. At the fake workshop they were also required to do physical training (“PT”) including the guys carrying their partners on their backs, down a driveway and back. At the regular summer workshops, the newbie guys were told to wrestle the teaching guy at the end of their practice. There was a “guy night” where the newbie guys were tilded and driven around town, told to put baby oil on themselves, and had a cigar put in their mouths. At the “girls night”, newbie girls were told to bring a swimsuit and a rubber duck. The girls were told to put on their swimsuits and were handed blindfolds. Once blindfolded, the girls formed a line and were escorted outside to a stop sign up like a stop sign with two rubber ducks on either end. They were told to evade other girls to get the rubber duck on the other side of the way.</td>
